Dear Mr. Henry:

Re: Ending the war on hydrocarbons including coal

Thank you for your 27 March 2015 reply to my letter dated 17 March 2015.

I note that you did not provide me, as requested, with the specific location of specific empirical scientific evidence as the basis for your position on climate.

Instead, you state in context of the UN IPCC, “in defining its position BHP Billiton has considered a wide spectrum of views, including those relating to climate change science.”

This is not reassuring, it is disturbing. Science is determined by scientific evidence not by considering “views”. Your latest statement undermines and contradicts your statement dated 20 January 2015, that (BHP Billiton’s) ... “position and our actions on climate change are underpinned by a robust understanding of climate science ...”

I feel perplexed because you now state that your position is based on factors other than science. On what views, specifically, other than climate science is BHP Billiton climate policy based?

You now say “The BHP Billiton Board and management regularly review the latest developments in climate science, policy and regulatory responses.” Could you please advise who on the board and who in the management are reviewing the science?

By taking the position you stipulate after previously receiving references specifying corruption by the UN IPCC you are knowingly endorsing the UN IPCC’s corruption of climate science and thereby endorsing that demonstrably and thoroughly corrupt organisation. Further the UN IPCC has no empirical scientific evidence of human use of hydrocarbons causing climate variability and contradicts empirical evidence.

I look forward to your specific responses to both this letter’s requests and hope that you will provide the specific location of specific empirical scientific evidence supporting the position you again choose to adopt.

Yours sincerely,
